Q: .keypress not working on google chrome extension / bot I have a bot extension and when I add this code on.load S("input[type='text']").keypress(function(){ alert('bla bla'); }); it doesn't work on chrome, safari, etc. When I have the code on.click it works on every browser A: This is why you should always use jQuery for browser extensions. And this is why it's okay to use jQuery directly in a web page even when the page was not loaded with jQuery already. If you would have added a simple Hello World inside your using jQuery's S() method, you'd have a local variable of that Hello World and thus when you reload the page the Hello World would stay there. If you would have used document.getElementById("element-id") or any of the other methods to get to that element, you would have lost it when you reloaded the page, and then there would be no way for your extension to get to it. You should never use jQuery directly inside a web page when you're using a browser extension. You must use jQuery in your extension, unless you're using jQuery in an.html page that was loaded with jQuery already and thus has a local variable jQuery already. In the latter case, your extension can safely load jQuery and run its methods directly. In other words, it will never have to do work to find the elements it needs. In any case, you can always use document.getElementById("element-id") when you need to and jQuery can always be used inside extensions, you just have to avoid using it directly in a web page. 2 (b) 1 / 6 (c) - 2 0 / 9 (d) 0 . 4 b W h i c h i s t h e c l o s e s t t o -
