When men are exposed to a series of attractive women, they will tend to bond with one that they think is most attractive. "We don't see this phenomenon as a flaw or a pathology, just one of the ways that men show their preferences. It's a part of nature," Dr Beversdorf said. The aversion to masculinity in women "It's also true that women do tend to have a preference for men who are more masculine. Men with more masculine facial features are seen as safer and more competent." But Dr Beversdorf said research also revealed a severe aversion in women to facial masculinity. This aversion appeared to be strong and became more pronounced as a woman approached menopause. "This aversion to masculinity in women is a negative aspect of our evolutionary past," Dr Beversdorf said. As such, he said, women who had suppressed their aversion to masculinity developed more masculine facial features as a way of coping with their environment. "It's a little like women who have poor body image and who therefore want to look like models," he said. The preference for more feminine faces did not appear to be influenced by hormone level. The preference for more feminine faces did not appear to be influenced by hormone level. (ABC News: Nick Harley) Dr Beversdorf said he wanted to find out why and exactly how

Q: Get the property value based on value I have a user control usercontrol1 which has a property usercontrol1.bool property1 value. I am showing this user control in some places and hiding it in others. I want that based on this property, I can show or hide various parts of the user control. For eg in code behind if(usercontrol1.Property1) { //do something } else { //do something else } Please suggest what would be the best approach to use. A: There's a few ways to do this. A common one is to maintain a list of the different groups of controls and access that list: myControl.DataContext = userControl1.Property1? "This is the first group" : "This is the second group"; Another way is to use a StyleSelector or DataTemplateSelector: ... ... Then you can access the controls with DataContext, e.g.: ...
