Grover, Satish 2008, The Architecture of India, Buddhist and Hindu.Q: Storing multiple users data in one mysql database I am doing some coursework on django and I've come to an issue I can't seem to work out. I am supposed to make an app that allows multiple users to use and store notes in one database and sort them by date so that later they can be pulled up and put in order. So I am making a database called notes that is set up with two fields: date and content and I'm going to use one more table called users to link all of these together, then I'm going to make a form that lets users enter notes. The issue I have is the form that lets users enter notes. My problem is that I want all of the data to be sorted by date so I have to put the date on the database as a column. Now the thing is if there is multiple users that are going to be writing in the same database I have to figure out how to create a unique user id for each user, which would be hard for me because I don't really know how to do that. Now I found this: which seems to be a very good guide but I'm stuck as to what to do next. I know this is a very broad question but any help would be greatly appreciated, thanks! A: The best way to do this is to have a unique username for each user. So you can do something like: Create table notes (note_id int primary
