During a disease flare, a state of "immunological quiescence" can be found, allowing spontaneous proliferation of the pathogenic immune response. Upregulation of gene families that code for proteins involved in T-cell differentiation have been proposed as potential biomarkers for a new treatment<sup>1</sup>[@CR140]. A spontaneous T-cell response can be detected in patients with TNF- $\alpha$  inhibitors including adalimumab, either at weeks or at month 4 of therapy<sup>1</sup>[@CR135]. An augmented T-cell response is recorded at week 12 of adalimumab treatment at levels that correlate with endoscopic and endoscopic remission of inflammation<sup>1</sup>[@CR135]. Suppression of innate immune functions by adalimumab (#Sec16) ===== Aberrant Th17 responses are considered to be involved in the pathogenesis of IBD. In addition to the previous TNF- $\alpha$  target, ADA appears to play a significant role in the downregulation of Th17 responses. The administration of ADA decreases the transcriptional levels of Th17-related cytokines (IL-23p19 and IL-17) along with IL-17-producing cells in peripheral blood mononuclear cells, and the levels of serum IL-17 are inversely correlated with the clinical outcome of adalimumab therapy<sup>1</sup>[@CR152]. The risk of postoperative infection is higher in patients with IBD than in healthy subjects<sup>1</sup>[@CR153]-[@CR156]. The anti-TNF agent infliximab has been reported to reduce the incidence of postoperative infections in IBD patients<sup>1</sup>[@CR156]. In contrast to infliximab, adalimumab seems to have a weak protective role. A randomized study assessed the effects of adalimumab, infliximab, and placebo on the incidence of postoperative infections in IBD patients. Interestingly, the incidence of postoperative infections was
