First, I used the "system restore" program to restore my computer to another time which I can remember, but it didn't work. So I used the "advanced system restore" program to restore my computer to this time (which I can remember). The backup I had taken before was corrupted. (I don't know what happened to it.) It asked me if I wanted to restore using the backup I had taken before or I wanted to restore using the backup I had made now. So I chose to restore using the backup that I had made now. After that, I clicked the option to restore all programs and files, and after 2 hours, my computer was restored. It asked me to select the restore point. So I chose the restore point when my computer was restored to the time

I had made the backup I had taken now. I had problems with some programs such as my antivirus program, but it was restored in about 5 hours after I had made the backup I had made now. I think it is better to use the backup you have made now than the backup you had taken before.# [13.1. Max-Matching](## [2]?] Given an 3e33713323
