When we talk about logical data structures, we always talk about trees, especially those trees where every node has a pointer to the left sub-tree and a pointer to the right sub-tree, and these pointer's should be connected into the chain. The tree structure alone is not enough, we must give a meaning to these pointer's. So how should we define a logical data structure? Imagine a tree where every node is of the form of: { name = to_ e24f408de9
