I have checked it from the setting inside the Ubuntu and it says that Gmail is the default mail service. But I can not send mails, and I have a problem. The recipient is accepted, but the mail itself is not. It didn't come from a local system but from the Gmail? A: In my opinion, the best way is to change your mail transport. First, you go to mail-tray settings. Find the transport section. Then, click Edit. Take a look at this screenshot. You could select any transport, but I'd suggest using Ubuntu's default ESMTP/POP3 in combination with Gmail, because they have a good compatibility and you can just click "Cancel". Also, it is needed to set a password for POP3. More information about configuring ESMTP in Gmail can be found here.
