Photoshop Workspace Every project in Photoshop has a workspace. The workspace is the place where all the files and documents are stored. Each file is assigned to one workspace and all the image editing tools are available in the workspace. It is very similar to word processing workspaces where you can save, open and create different text documents. You can assign a new workspace to open a new project. In the beginning, I suggest you create a workspace for each type of project or each type of file. For example, you can set a workspace for each of the following: Adobe Photoshop CC Adobe Lightroom Affinity Photo CC Using a Workspace for Photoshop CC Create a new file by pressing N. Alternatively, you can create a new document. Clicking on the New document icon changes the New file window to a blank document. Clicking on the dropdown arrow of the New document icon and selecting Photoshop CC opens the Adobe Photoshop CC document. Now that you have a new Photoshop document, type the name of your file and press Enter. It will save the file in the workspace of the Adobe Photoshop CC document. We will name the project Toilet Paper Roll. Edit an Image in Photoshop CC We can create images in various ways, including modifying images, creating new images, etc. The creative way to edit an image is to save it as a file and then open it. If you want to edit an image quickly, you can double-click on an image. This method is faster than opening a file and working on it. So, double-click on the Toilet Paper Roll.PSD file. The file opens in Photoshop CC. Notice that the image looks different. This is because we have not saved the image before editing it. If we have [Experiences in practicing strategic management in the health area]. This is a study of strategic management in the health area. Such an introduction was attempted by means of a qualitative research, which was carried out by means of a questionnaire with 153 questions, submitted to managers of health institutions and municipalities, on a region of Santiago, from June to November 1995. The purpose was to discover the management attitudes of said institutions towards the health area, as well as the procedures, instruments, processes, evaluation methods and instruments of strategic management, employed by them. There were 77 completed questionnaires, which were analyzed by a statistical procedure. It was considered interesting to know the following: the signification attributed to the variables studied and the factors that rule the health areas; the points of view of the institutions; the importance the institutions accord the strategic management of the health area; the perspective the health institutions intend to maintain, and the instruments, procedures, processes, evaluation methods and instruments of strategic management employed by them.

Q: Set Minimum count for Long polling to work in angularjs How would i make sure to wait for a period of time before firing the next request? Currently my angular code looks like this:

const poll = $interval(() => { $http.get(url).then(res => { console.log(res.data.someArray); }); },5000);

I want to implement polling in angular but without performing the request immediately. Ideally i would like to make it wait for 5 seconds and then make the request. How do i implement this? A: If you want 5 seconds to elapse from the time you invoke the $http.get() before you make the next call you will have to use an interval. You could also use setTimeout() but for this example we won't be using it. The code will be something like this

const poll = $interval(() => { $http.get(url).then(res => {
console.log(res.data.someArray); }); }, 5000);
poll.unsubscribe(); // needed to stop poll,

because poll is not an angular service Let's say you have a button on your screen that will invoke the polling Click

(CNN) Travelers can now enter Florida from Georgia and Alabama through checkpoints on state highways without crossing Florida's southern border with Mexico. The order, signed on Thursday by Florida Gov. Rick Scott, allows the state's Department of Transportation to assign state employees to the checkpoints. It directs state agencies to secure the checkpoints, and the state will bear the costs of the operation. "Today I'm directing the Florida Department of Transportation to implement roadblocks along Florida's southern border to verify the security of our ports of entry for vehicles and pedestrians," Scott said in a statement. "As governor, I have a constitutional duty to protect the people of the state and ensure that all commodities are properly vetted before they enter our borders, and I will do all I can to secure the ports of entry in my state so that we can continue to welcome family and friends visiting the state on vacation." At least two checkpoints have been established along Interstate 95 in Citrus County, near Palm Beach Gardens and near the border with Georgia. According to a DOT report, both checkpoints have been operational for the last several days and are being manned by both state and federal officers from Homeland Security. At least four others are being considered.

Q: Bash 5+ to match a "first-n" of each character I want to modify this bash script to repeat the first number of each character in a line. The number can be any number, thus a greedy string match is not suitable. Since the script is to be called with a single line and I want to modify the output, sed is not ideal. Bash solution preferred. I can use any bash version 5+ that includes getopts.

#!/bin/bash
while getopts ":C" optname; do case $optname in
    C) echo;;
  esac
done

Example input: a ab abc
Output: 1 2 3

A: The following solution uses the newer Bash 4.x extensions:

#!/bin/bash -e
while getopts ":C" optname; do
  case $optname in
    C) C=${OPTARG}
