Human skin cancer cells secrete parathyroid hormone-related peptide that promotes angiogenesis and stimulates survival of tumor cells. Parathyroid hormone-related peptide (PTHrP) is a chemotactic growth factor for glioma and glioblastoma cells and promotes angiogenesis. PTHrP is expressed in the majority of human basal cell carcinomas (BCCs) and the PTHrP(+) BCCs produce high levels of vascular endothelial growth factor (VEGF). Herein, we report that PTHrP is also produced by normal keratinocytes and malignant squamous cell carcinoma (SCC) cells. Endogenous PTHrP is stored in the vesicles of the keratinocyte (K14-PTHrP) and SCC (UTSCC12-PTHrP) cells in the form of secretory proteins. Secreted PTHrP

was a potent chemoattractant for keratinocytes and SCC cells and formed invaginations of the cell surface membranes in response to PTHrP stimulation. PTHrP enhanced the survival of tumor cells and prevented their death by proapoptotic cytokines. We also demonstrated that PTHrP up-regulated VEGF expression in normal and SCC cells and promoted angiogenesis.

Interestingly, PTHrP also stimulated the expression of the antiapoptotic protein Bcl-2 in SCC cells. Thus, endogenous PTHrP may play an important role in the growth of primary skin tumors by stimulating angiogenesis and survival of tumor cells.
