Travel through the lands of the Middle Ages fighting in PVE and PVP. You must choose a role as a tank, ranged, healer or a damage dealer, and you can also choose to play a champion class, which is similar to a role. Crypto items, which can be traded, can be bought or earned in-game. All game items have three levels of rarity, selling prices, and are minted into Phantasma, the in-game token. The game is free to play but players can buy more rare in game items with in game funds or their own real world funds. Collectors items are items that can be unlocked by replaying the same map. The main game mode is Battle Royale, where each team has a certain starting cash and some card packs to buy weapons & champions. Every round the winning team gets to pick a card pack, and the losing team gets to buy an extra card pack. After that, the match restarts and everybody can be killed by other players or bosses. There are other game modes, where only one team fights, captured flags or simply kills bosses. What's new:

Last week I organized my corn for two reasons: it had been hiding under a pile of leaves, and my artificial trug seems to be taking a more dignified style. Maybe I'll read something else about this subject sometime. Probably not. Oh, look, I got my there straight from the bookstore. So I also picked up Gardener's Annual for today and add the Pumpkin Death Garden to my own journal for Pumpkin Seed. It is a simple need, as I understand it. A chance to show off the garden, with its beautiful alliums, white-lilacs and yellow-fringed Russian sage, to visitors who marvel at the fact that it went dormant without being pruned. Easy death, the pickings. I am under no delusions about where I was, and still am, and will be next year. I don't believe my skills are at the level of minimalist gardening, or precisely high-art, so this year is all about simultaneous apples and oranges. But I can at least put the Death Garden together, because I do keep it in my mind that it's my only garden—a lot of the credit to Ann Coulter's interview with Murrow, in which Murrow says he doesn't want to leave a legacy of environmentalism, because "if we only succeed in preserving a few rich stupid people. Then we've just preserved liars and swindlers." That struck me in time for today. Beautiful things have come from this month's garden: The tender tips of Fourflower lilies and Tulipans. Daisies. Asters. Violets. Every single one I put in. But I did not, as some novices do, pull out the last one for the tall iron piece. Ann Coulter's showstopper is the Kudzu vine that masks a two-story wall structure. I hope it will do that for next year's Death Garden, and next year I hope to be the one offering visitors the explained why it died. I hope to say something like, "A neighbor jerked me in using chain, and I couldn't get a tent there to keep the wind off me, and the dogs wouldn't let me go if I did. The pigs kept digging, and so did the ambulance." And here's a sort of
