NetSend is a messaging application that allows you to send messages directly from your machine to other computers on your local network, either to an individual machine or to a group of users. If your machine is not connected to the internet, NetSend will behave as if it is! The software is self-starting and will automatically search for a computer or list of computers on your local network. The second field of the application displays the computer or list of computers, along with their names. The users of the computer or list will be notified when you send messages to them. NetSend is an easy-to-use tool and can be used in any networked environment where you know the names of your computer(s) and the (sub-)domain (employees.work.domain) of each user. You can also set the computer(s) or list of computers that you want to receive messages. If you need to use one of the computers of the list of computers to send messages, you need to first log into the recipient computer. NetSend can then be used to send messages to you from another computer, which you can access. The download file you receive is the full version of NetSend. You need no other components of the program. You can use it with a non-installed Windows, as a standalone executable, or use it to upgrade your current Net Send GUI. The program's internal database, made up of tables, searches for information about computers in your network and allows you to send messages to users who might be using a computer that is not the currently logged in user's. The program's settings are stored on your hard drive. Each user can create his/her own personal settings. You can change and backup them at any time without having to re-install the program. The program can be installed without a prompt, or can be copied with the prompt. This program's main windows displays: Main window - a list of computers (network devices) in your network - a list of users (attached to a computer) in your network - a list of computers (network devices) that NetSend should send messages to - a list of computers (network devices) that NetSend should receive messages from - the description of computer and its parameters - a summary of computers that have been set to receive messages - a list of computers (network devices) that have been set to receive messages from. You can also choose a computer that will receive messages b7e8fdf5c8

Version 1.5, Release Date: 2007/11/08, Cultural Changes: - Improvements: - General Changes: - New Features: - Fixes: - The needed permissions are installed on the computer that will be used for email. Fomine NetSend sends email from that mail server and when it is received by a Windows-based POP3 or IMAP4 server and requires an action to be performed before the message is delivered. It is also possible to send an email from the Windows-based SMTP server. RSS for NetSend delivers the updates to the Fomine NetSend news feed to the RSS reader or desktop notification service. The program itself supports this feature. You need not to install the RSS Reader - everything is completely integrated into the program. Read detailed information about the program in its manual. Fomine NetSend Installation Notes: Both the NetSend and the NetSend GUI are distributed in a compressed archive file. To install the software you need just unpack the archive and move the resulting file to the directory: C:\Program Files\Fomine. To uninstall the program completely, you have to remove it from the system and delete the corresponding directory (C:\Program Files\Fomine). To uninstall only the NetSend GUI you have to uninstall the application from Add/Remove Programs menu in Control Panel. Fomine NetSend Settings: When you install Fomine NetSend it creates the file C:\ProgramData\Fomine\FomineNetSend.ini with the parameters you can use later. You can also change some of them there. For example, if you want to disable or enable the autostart of NetSend GUI, you can do so in the C:\ProgramData\Fomine\FomineNetSend.ini file. Fomine NetSend, as well as NetSend GUI, supports Unicode, so you can type any text in any Unicode language in the fields, just choose the character set. Fomine NetSend GUI user interface: The GUI program allows you to define the message parameters in advance and then the program instantly sends the configured message. There are not too many settings in this program. If you want to start/stop the automated messaging from your computer, you need to determine the size of the NetSend GUI window. The netSend GUI parameters to be set in order to work
