Bottom Left : Blue Bottom Right : Red Top Left : Green Top Right : Yellow Microsoft's Trident engine crashed (1998) - iamtimix ====== kick I love this. Thanks for sharing, Microsoft. The last line is a good insight into the thinking of the Classic Scripting team: _> He didn't care that this was mostly intended to provide functionality to the workers in the MSDN club forums, or as a historical poster in the Library of Alexandria._ For a while, it was difficult to know where "classic" ended and "modern" began. The work that ended up on the.NET framework was written in Modern Scripting. I'm not saying that's what this program really was, though. I'm saying that the only reason it was called "classic" was because it predated the things that made.NET so good. It's great to see that it was, in fact, made good. ------ fpgaminer I think I need to build out my React Native skill set more. I find it fascinating how much the story of JavaScript development is complete just from reading the news. ;) ~~~ kick I know this is a bit of a strange request, but... > _it was written in JavaScript_ When I use the word "modern" in this context, I have a very specific mental model in mind: Javascript in the browser. > _by the standards of the time it was extremely advanced._ You're talking about JavaScript here. : The True Story of the Most Audacious Heist in History (Hardcover) Description For more than 30 years, Ken Thomson has been one of the most familiar faces in the world of sport. For more than 30 years, Ken Thomson has been one of the most familiar faces in the world of sport. In Africa, Australia, Europe, the Americas and

Asia, this original, dazzling man has been the major league of the track and field meet, high-stakes gambler and fierce competitor. Now, Thomson, the only person ever to make professional athlete, athlete, restaurateur and author, has charted the most audacious crime in history, a job he has done for more than a quarter-century. He has written the account of the outrageous plan, the comic, absurd reason why it was conceived, the trials and errors that brought it to fruition and the cops who foiled it. What follows is a new way to tell the story of what happens to those who gamble that their dreams will come true--and why their dreams didn't come true. About the Author Ken Thomson was a pioneer of professional sport, advising 10 English premiership teams, creating a Formula One racing series in the US and working for 22 years as an American football coach. He has spent the last four decades in the exhibition game, coaching Summer Olympic Trials in both men's and women's high jump. Author of over 100 writing appearances in sport magazines throughout the country as well as seven books, his numerous social media and Internet presence, and his television appearances, Thomson is known by more than eight million people worldwide. The author of The Summa of Ken Thomson, a philosophical publication, his most recent book, God Is Dead, is currently in its third printing. Praise For... "The Pacific Northwest track-and-field chameleon has charted the most audacious heist in history, ever to be foiled, nearly a quarter-century in coming. Thomson's self-effacing observations about more than a half-century of nurturing his many athletic endeavors are beautiful. He provides insight to those who have no qualms about making their dreams come true." --DAVID P. KENNEDY, sports journalist and author of the best-selling books No Excuses, The Greatest: The Nicklaus/Cobb Era, The Men Who Rode the Tiger: A Celebration of Classic Cars and the 100th Running of the Indianapolis 500

KNAP processing of quantized evoked potentials using enhanced Cohen's classifier to determine seizure presence and location. We used the Cohen's classifier to perform seizure (i.e., presence and location) detection in human subjects using quantized evoked potentials (QEP). The classifier operates by selecting the best Cohen feature subset for each QEP epoch; the decoding process is then performed by application of iteratively increasing subsets of the selected subsets until either a correct decoding or a preset error criterion is met. Cohen's classifier was adapted and enhanced to improve two aspects of its performance: (1) more rapid convergence in decoding (using a quotient approximation) and (2) incremental adjustment of the error threshold that was used in selecting the feature subset. We used 20 QEP epochs recorded from each of five focal seizure onset and three chronic seizure implanted subjects while they performed a learned association experiment on noun pairs. Cohen's classifier
