A total of 55 Biafran and pro-Biafra demonstrators were killed and over 100 people injured in Monday's violence, according to the Associated Press. President Goodluck Jonathan condemned the attack, calling for calm. Alhaji Umar N. Danbazau, the Nigerian president's spokesman, said the attack was an attempt to sabotage the peace deal. An attack on pro-Biafran protesters by the Northern Nigerian opposition on the same day, also caused collateral damage. A mosque also caught fire during the massacre, injuring dozens. Two girls were killed and many were injured in a church fire in the Matinaka area of Kaduna. Around 30 people were displaced from the churches of New Jerusalem Seventh Day Adventist Church, Grace Pentecostal Church, and St. Louis Catholic Church. The Catholic church, whose parish was among those burnt, was not among the ones that sustained damage by the firebomb. Local observers said that about two hours before the blaze started at St. Louis, on a very busy street, the Catholic students who played basketball there were noticed by local people and those residents informed the Catholic priests and church leaders. Tens of thousands of Yen People's Democratic Party supporters are demanding a parliamentary election
