Q: Bash string delimited by certain characters Given the following string: This is a test, this is a test. Is there a way to extract the contents within the delimiters from the strings without matching or using regular expressions? Example, using sed: `echo "This is a test, this is a test." | sed -e's/[.?!]*//g'` This is a test, this is a test A: You can use gnu-awk `awk '{sub(/[.?!]/, "")}' 1` A: The following would probably be the most portable solution: `cat file | sed's/[[:space:]]\+//g'` Although the echo command seems to strip the newline characters, it also strips the surrounding quotes and spaces, and it shouldn't be part of your problem anyway. If you want to use awk, you could do this: `awk '{gsub(/[[[:space:]]\+/, ""); print}' file` To test this code against your example: `echo "This is a test, this is a test." | awk '{gsub(/[[[:space:]]\+/, ""); print}'` This is a test, this is a test. The other examples all seem to have an extra space at the end. Delayed memory for faces in the traumatic amnesic syndrome. Individuals who have suffered brain injury have been reported to show a specific deficit in the ability to recall recent events. However, a recent report has suggested that individuals with amnesia following TBI show a normal ability to learn event sequences. The present study was designed to examine if amnesic patients with closed head injury have deficits in the ability to learn over long time periods. Memory for a short story was tested by a delayed-recall procedure, in a group of 16 individuals with post-traumatic amnesia (PTA) and a group of 16 age-matched healthy controls. Analyses of recognition of old and new information indicated that amnesic subjects showed an overall impairment in learning about story events. Interestingly, they showed a normal ability to learn new information on a daily basis. A correlation between memory performance and the severity of amnesia was found in the amnesic group. The results suggest that individuals with PTA may have problems with remembering information on a daily basis, but not necessarily with remembering recent events.

The broad, long-term objectives of this proposal are to understand the mechanisms of N-acetylglucosamine (GlcNAc) metabolism. In bacteria and mammals, GlcNAc is a component of the cell wall, a nutrient-sensing molecule that is critical to fundamental biological processes, and a key glycosylation motif. The maturation of proteins with GlcNAc, or N-acetylglucosamine-modified glycans, is critical for bacterial adhesion and infection. And GlcNAc is also the essential building block for bacterial virulence factors, such as toxins and capsules. The ability of N-acetylglucosamine (GlcNAc) to regulate pathogenicity may, therefore, represent an attractive target for therapeutic intervention. To achieve this, we must first understand how GlcNAc metabolism is

The stories are an outgrowth of my experience as a student in the program, and like all of my writings have undergone rigorous editing, revision, and rewriting. The other work presented here, like The Swordsman, is a result of this effort. Out of over 90 short stories
