The problem is, on my dev machine, the "show" button shows up, and only shows up, when I shrink the browser. So it shows up normally on the big screen, but on the small devices, the button doesn't show up at all. It's a question of either a bug in the code, or a setting somewhere that I need to fix. show list element list element A: On small devices, you will get the error "Uncaught TypeError: $(...).collapse is not a function". I've seen two or three questions about this, and I've put "duplicate" as the reason, but I think they didn't really answer the question. I have a new iPad, and I was wondering how I can get the keyboard to behave more like a keyboard on the iPhone. On my iPhone (also new), it feels like the little symbols are spaced differently and tend to crowd together, and also they seem to be smaller. Is there a setting or something I can tweak? A: I think the iPad keyboard is pretty much the same as the iPhone keyboard. It's set to a larger virtual keyboard and the size is handled by UITextFields. From Apple's documentation for UITextField: A text field can display either a regular keyboard or a keyboard for formatting data. In the case of the iPad, the formatting keyboard handles all the presentation for you. The formatting keyboard defines how typing into a text field works. You provide the text that you want to display by typing into the keyboard, and it formats the text appropriately for the display you have chosen. So there isn't really any reason not to use the formatting keyboard on the iPhone. Q: How to resolve this recursion?
