Q: How can I use a NSString to store a binary file? I have my image saved in the Documents folder: [imageData writeToFile:@"~/Desktop/image.jpg" atomically:YES]; How can I set it as a NSString so that I can load it and display it in my app? A: You do this with NSData. As NSData has a method called initWithContentsOfFile:, all you have to do is convert your NSData object to a NSString object, and initWithContentsOfFile: will give you your NSString object. NSData *imageData = [NSData dataWithContentsOfFile:@"~/Desktop/image.jpg"]; NSString *imageString = [[NSString alloc] initWithData:imageData encoding:NSUTF8StringEncoding]; For more on using NSData, see the NSData reference. When you change your ads in Google, search results could suffer. Google warned Wednesday that changes to the search algorithm could hurt your search traffic this year, and now it's laid out in easy-to-digest writing why. Obviously, having advertisements show up near the top of a search result is what Google wants. It shows you less ads and more natural links from popular websites and gives more attention to those sites, and that can mean more clicks and conversions, whether you're in the U.S. or overseas. The reason that those ads are in the top position is that most advertisers pay to have that amount of coveted real estate, but Google is trying to balance that with the search results that users really want. That means that clicks and conversions from those ads could go down, or, more realistically, you'll see no change at all. "If we see search behavior or clicks that don't align with the ads in your account, we might make changes to your account at any time," Google's post says, leaving you with that little nugget of information about what happens. Some of the major changes include: More natural results Fewer ads More ads in the "other" section More ads in "local" section More ads in "videos" section You'll have a better idea of what's happening when you see a change to your ads when you go to account settings. You can also

Background The Warrior in the Rings was the album that brought Ron Carter to the notice of the jazz public, albeit as part of a quartet. The album was recorded at Keystone Korner in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in May 1977 and consists of eight tracks, all arranged by Quincy Jones, except for "Viva", which is arranged by Ben Findley. Davis was the bandleader, except for a few live performances with his then-house-band during the 1970s. Ben Findley had been selected for that role and Davis was planning to dedicate the album to him. Recording and music The Warrior in the Rings contains 12 compositions by Quincy Jones; there are five reed compositions, one short single flute piece, one oboe solo and five orchestral compositions. As Davis wrote later, the album shows the way his band performed in his house band: Davis was not happy with the album's recording; he had expected a finer recording, but he was unaware of the condition in which the studio was, and it was forced to record live in only four channels. Nevertheless, the album remains a reference for what Davis was capable of. Quincy Jones' arrangements include, in addition to the main theme that leads the compositions, another theme of one of the two flute pieces (a blues theme in "A Song of Praise"). It was a part of Carter's playing and the arrangements of the compositions were a result of the structure and performance of the quartet. Track listing Personnel Band Ron Carter –
