I still intend to try another novel, probably a lengthier one though, but have a few years to find one of those "one day" ideas before getting ready for retirement! Chlorophenoxyisobutyrate (CBI) induces in vitro activation of monocytes and splenocytes. CBI is a broad-spectrum herbicide effective against broadleaf weeds, which is widely used in agricultural field in China. It has been reported that these toxic effects may be associated with immunotoxicity. The studies of molecular mechanism of monocytes and lymphocytes induced by CBI are not sufficient. The objective of the present study was to investigate the effects of p-chlorophenoxyisobutyrate (CBI), the active metabolite of ferbam on in vitro activation of monocytes and splenocytes. The results showed that monocytes and splenocytes stimulated by CBI significantly up-regulated the expression of tumor necrosis factor- α , interleukin (IL)-1 β , interferon (IFN)- γ , and IL-6 at the transcriptional and translational levels, as well as significantly increased the release of NO. Moreover, the phosphorylation of ERK1/2, p38, and JNK1/2 was dramatically elevated and the I κ B α degradation was facilitated in monocytes and splenocytes treated with CBI. These results suggested that CBI at the concentration of 30 μ mol/L could activate monocytes and splenocytes in vitro and that activation of ERK1/2, p38, and JNK1/2 and I κ B α signaling pathway may be involved in the process.
