Not long after his "wife" left, the show's producers, concerned that they had yet to sell a ticket, came up with a new idea. "I thought, 'Do I ever get to go on stage?' And, well, you know, they said, 'Y'know, we're going to get a dog — we're going to get a dog. Do you want to come on stage with a dog?' So they got me a dog. He's a tennis ball retriever." An eleven-year-old girl was at a donkey show in Texas with her mother, an older man, and a 4-year-old boy. Two girls had a contest to see who could fart the loudest. So the baby entered the room. It was one of those loud farts, but the baby wasn't shy about it. It surprised the audience and the mother, but the bigger surprise came when the father scooped the baby up to say goodbye and the baby promptly took a big poo in his pants. A cuddly octopus washed up on a beach in France. When police tried to capture it, they saw that it was wearing a pantsuit. You have just read an article from the What What What? series. Thanks for reading! was worried about it, even after we published. Fear was my body's way of being sure. I was a nasty, antisocial sleeper and work was hard to come by. I felt like I had become an addict. I was terrified. About a year ago I was lucky enough to come across a company that said they specialized in treating sleep disorders. I was desperate and willing to try

Q: Using a "dynamic" HTTP header value in a request I was wondering how I can go about doing what is noted in the image below. Basically, the idea is that the back end will respond with the header before it reads the actual data, and then put the information in a value. I know I can use the "cookie" (which is a static) on the server side to fill in the other values, but is there a way to do it on the client side, such as the cookies are? If not, could someone explain why it's not possible to add a dynamic header value as seen in the image? Thanks, UPDATE I just wanted to make it clear, I'm using the WebSockets library in the client-side javascript, which makes it more difficult for me to use the cookies in this way. A: If you're using the WebSocket library, the best solution is to send the API request, then wait for a response, then parse it and put the info in the right place. A: The answer was found at Basically, it's not possible to add the value after the actual request is sent. It is known that bacterial cellulose is used as a material for biomedical use such as a filler for medical use, a biomaterial for medical use and the like, since it has high biocompatibility. Bacterial cellulose has such a structure that a cellulose molecule is subjected to and bound with a linker such as a polypeptide chain and the like. Here, the linker has a higher reactivity than a cellulose molecule. Bacterial cellulose is further subjected to a peptidase digestion. Therefore, a material that does not contain a linker is expected. Known is a method of producing a bacterial cellulose free of a linker, by using a strain with inactivation of the peptid
