Previous studies in microglia using lipopolysaccharide (LPS) or tumor necrosis factor-alpha (TNFalpha) as a stimulus have shown that NO production is required to eliminate the production of TNFalpha and inhibit nitrotyrosine levels. This effect seems to be partly mediated by peroxynitrite (ONOO(-)) formation. The goal of this study was to determine whether peroxynitrite could be considered as a mediator of microglia activation. Cultured rat microglia were treated with TNFalpha, LPS, or interferon-gamma (IFNgamma) with or without an ONOO(-) scavenger (meso-2,3-dimercaptosuccinic acid (DMSA)) or with SIN-1, a peroxynitrite donor. Microglial NO production (measured by accumulation of nitrite in the medium) was determined both at the transcriptional level by using the reporter

Mircea Eliade, a Romanian scholar and historian, had a theoretical interest in the pre-historic period, particularly studying the survival of shamanistic cultures and practices after the Neolithic Revolution.

What would an ancient Stone Age Shaman look like? He or she would be a magical person in the tribe, perhaps a healer, a priest, an artist, an objectshamans, and so onâ∏and so onâ∏the mind wanders into the shamanic, pre-ludic, or liminal, in every sense of the term. The shamanic traditions of Western civilization are based on a Stone Age, Indo-European, pastoral, shamanic, and magical culture, and every shamanic tradition at every point of history has looked backward toward pre-ludic cultures, passed through the times of the "magical," and thereby attains its modern form. This is not a matter of belief, but rather of imagination, role-playing, and perception. Although Eliade is not known for his love of cinema, in 1957 he was interviewed by F. Richard Stephenson for a film called The Shaman: An Expedition to the Jungles of the Mind. Perhaps inspired by the conversations of a young Canadian filmmaker (his film was financed and produced by the Concordia Film Society in Montreal), he spoke of this parallel of the shaman and the movies as a result of which it was "possible to say that in certain circumstances the very things we see on the screen are often more present and more comprehensible, from the very things that cinema itself has to offer, than those things which are normally more real, more 'natural,' or more substantial." The film "The Shaman" stars lack Palance as a man summoned by "the Devil" as he (or she) goes into a shamanic ecstatic, trancelike state. The Hollywood Star Collector suggests that the title "The Shaman" was used in the film simply because it is a commonly used title for the film, not because of an actual correlation with the film's central focus. While offering his conversation about the documentary,

Eliade went on to explain that cinema was like shamanismâ s prehistoryâ a term that the deeply closeted Eliade was apparently comfortable with. Full source on Shamans. By post-Neolithic shamanism is the result of an ancient human consciousness which has not really changed, and the application of such visions to specific tribes and particular regions
