How could they know that he is a cop?" "Oh, they probably have some kind of highly sophisticated sniffer-in-the-phone system. Just in case you ever decide to call up and order something." "And if they have that, they could just read my voice on the tape?" "Exactly." "Then we can't let them know. We have to persuade them it was just us. We have to _convince_ them it was just us." "But how?" I looked at Bob. "Bob, I think you've got it. Please tell me how." We were both silent for a long while. Then Bob said, "I think you have to be very persuasive." I got out of the car and slowly got out onto the sidewalk. Bob started the car and pulled onto the street. "Get in, I want to drive us to the _Los Angeles Times_ and talk to Jimmy." # "I KNOW IT'S you," said Jimmy in a low, wary voice. "I heard you and Rick on the phone." "It is me," I said. "We've been trying to call you." "Well, I'm not on the phone now. My cell phone died." "What are you doing here?" I asked. "What am _I_ doing here?" he said. "I'm working. I'm going to mail out the last ten hundred thousand copies of the _Los Angeles Times_." "Don't you want to meet me?" "There's no point. You're not going to be able to find me. I have fourteen other customers, too." "But I won't be able to find you, either. Because you and me... we're kind of the same. A kind of thing. We have to be careful, too." b7e8fdf5c8
