The sealing of containers to prevent product spillage is a well-established practice. With respect to the packaging of various beverage products, it has been the practice in the industry to pack such products in glass bottles, aluminum cans, or the like, and to seal the containers in a number of manners. One of the most popular methods of sealing a container is to drive a metal sealing ring into the neck of the container while it is held in a suitable container-holding fixture. The metal ring has an axially projecting lip, which engages and severs the sealed area of the container. When a sealing machine is used to seal the ends of a cylindrical-shaped glass bottle, the glass is usually supported on a stack of circular discs. One of the discs usually has a vertical post on which the glass bottle is mounted. The bottle is moved vertically into engagement with the sealing mechanism, and the bottle is then rotated to seal the ends of the bottle. Such an arrangement is shown in U.S. Pat. No. 5,943,665 issued on Aug. 24, 1999 and in U.S. Pat. No. 6,138,716 issued on Oct. 31, 2000 to Harold E. McAdams, and both of these patents are assigned to the assignee of the present invention. The sealing of glass bottles has been accomplished by the use of a metal sealing ring which is moved into axial engagement with the circumferential area at the opening of the bottle by a rotating driver. The driver is mounted on a vertically elongated arm which holds the bottle and is rotated about a vertically extending axis to move the sealing ring into engagement with the glass. The above-described arrangement has proven to be effective in the processing of glass bottles. However, the technique is effective only when the glass bottle is supported vertically. If the glass bottle is not properly supported, that is, if it is not properly held in a vertical orientation, it will tend to rotate, which may result in the bottle becoming deformed or twisted and thereby

Sharing is Caring: We are here for free support to activate Robot Structural Analysis Professional 2018he biggest enemy of your success is your lack of vision. Your lack of vision prevents you from focusing on any one thing – you want to be a business owner/entrepreneur, not an idea guy. You must decide how you will make money. What will this do for you? Can you define and pursue those options in a detailed and clear way? Successful people have a vision. They know where they want to be; they know the things they want to do, what their accomplishments are and how they will be defined in their lives. They are on a course that will bring them to their destination. You have to set direction, otherwise you run headlong into roads that lead you nowhere. Can you do that? Yes. You've started, so you have. No, I'm not talking about setting goals. Being goal-oriented is good, but planning is even better. You've had enough time to get your plans together. Are you willing to set a definite path? Vision is a unique combination of what you want to achieve and why you want to achieve it. It's your way of putting a "hook" into the future. It's your mental map of what you want to be, do, and have, by the time you finish reading this. If you can put your heart, soul, and mind into your vision, you will find it much easier to plan, achieve, and, eventually, "make your vision happen." I invite you to reflect upon your own vision. Ask yourself some questions. What am I trying to do? Do I have a clear plan for how I will get there? Am I positive about what I want? What do I want to be when I'm 50 years old? What do I want to be when I'm 75? Do I have a plan for the first three to five years? How will I make a living? How will I learn? Do I have goals I am working on? What am I going to do when I am no longer on earth? Have you considered all of these questions? Do you know what you want? A detailed vision is what you are after. It's what
