I have a table with 2 columns, to help you imagine it: id_client : number name_client : varchar The column name_client, it's a field where the data of my table is going to be written. I need to write it while the data is being loaded from the database in a n-th order. The problem is that the id_client is never the same from an insertion of a new client, so I need a generic value to be put at the end of the list. For example: id_client name_client 001 John 002 Mary I want to write the data like this: id_client name_client 001 John 002 Mary 101 John 102 Mary Can someone please help me with this task. Thanks a lot. A: If you want to order by a column called "some_column" and if this column is not unique then the order is not meaningful, then you can do this using a "row_number()" function over the order by clause and then use this row_number() to extract the row_number in the where clause. Sample query: select id_client, name_client, row_number() over (order by id_client desc) as id_rank from your_table where id_client > 100; Note: Rownumber is automatically assigned a value of 1 from the start, you can specify a starting value by adding a constant to the order by clause: select id_client, name_client, row_number() over (order by id_client desc + 1) as id_
