Multisystem inflammatory syndrome-2 (MIS-2) has been reported in infectious and non-infectious conditions, but only a few cases have been reported in children. We describe an 11-year-old boy with influenza A H1N1 who had prolonged fever of up to 12 days and a history of sore throat. Laboratory evaluation revealed a white blood cell count (WBC) of 7100/mm³ with a neutrophilic predominance, an erythrocyte sedimentation rate (ESR) of 77 mm/hour, an elevated C-reactive protein (CRP) level of 15.1 mg/dL, a serum ferritin level of 4460 ng/mL, and a cardiac troponin-I level of 7.0 µg/L. Fever increased following the fourth day of illness, and the patient was treated with broad-spectrum antibiotics and started on intravenous (IV) methylprednisolone at a dose of 0.5 mg/kg/day, which was subsequently tapered and then stopped. His symptoms were complicated by a tachycardia, leg edema, and ascites. Evaluation of cardiac function revealed a left ventricular ejection fraction (LVEF) of 36.2%, and echocardiography showed diffuse left ventricular hypokinesia, pericardial effusion, and pericardial lymphadenopathy. The boy met the criteria for cardiac involvement of MIS-2. Despite treatment with IV methylprednisolone and antibiotics, his symptoms progressively worsened with a multiorgan failure. The patient developed respiratory failure and expired on the sixth day of hospitalization. Bacterial, viral, and fungal cultures were all negative. Necrotizing vasculitis was detected on autopsy. This is the first reported case of MIS-2 complicated by myocarditis associated with influenza A H1N1 in children..[@bib2] Other
