Download dialyzer and imagemagick..James Cavanagh James Cavanagh (c. 1845 – 25 July 1925) was an English murderer and pickpocket, born in Bow, London. His life history is set out in a chapter, "Laying of the Ghost", by Geraldine Cummins, in a book, When a Girl Marries, which follows four women's lives from the age of 18 to the age of 60, including the murder of the title. Cavanagh was apprenticed as a hatter and lived in the London area for the latter part of his life. In 1875, he married Sarah Hewlett, a 22-year-old widow who, in 1876, was convicted in Kingston upon Thames magistrates' court of having put an illegitimate child into the care of the parish of Christ Church, Southbury. It is known that Cavanagh was active in the field of prostitution. In 1874, he was found guilty in the magistrates' court of conspiring to violate the Act for the suppression of brothels (now renamed the A D Act) and was fined 10 shillings. In March 1875, he was found guilty of soliciting in the Artichoke public house in Blackfriars Road and fined 4 shillings. He was introduced to Cummins by the crime writer, James McNeil Whistler, and is said to have regaled Whistler's friends with a "bludgeoned corpse" story. It was later rewritten into Whistler's novel, A Pair of Blue Eyes. In 1876, he was sent to Wandsworth prison where he found work in the carpentry shop. After a while, he was transferred to the Coldbath Fields prison. He was convicted for public drunkenness in March 1877 and sentenced to 7 days in prison. In February 18 c6a93da74d
