set in modern day southern utah, the film centers on the story of aron ralston (james franco), who is stuck in a canyon when his climbing rope snaps. after five days, he manages to free himself, only to find that he has lost the use of his left arm. he decides to make a desperate attempt to walk out of the canyon, but only makes it a mile before he needs to amputate his arm. in order to move forward with his plans, he decides to write a book about his ordeal, which begins the story of the film. boyle admits he made a conscious decision to make this movie in hopes of getting a best picture nomination. this was because the focus on a real-life story is not something that studio's normally do. however, he was very fortunate to have the rights to the story. the director tells variety that he took a long look at the book and asked the author, "why not film this story?" boyle continued, "the book is a fascinating saga. i was fascinated by the idea that you can take your own worst nightmare and turn it into an adventure."
