Most of America survives with no interaction with cities, and with this efficiency of transportation will they be able to feed, cloth, and house all this wasted population? No. The article says 90% of current city dwellers are in cities, yet this fraction cannot sustain themselves with this kind of transportation system. So their solution is make everyone live in cities? How is that going to work? Turn around a few times and you will see that most of the problems of that solution turn up right there, right? The study calls for a massive shift in where people live, many more trains, some sort of transport system for people, and no cars. My guess is when they say no cars, they mean: massive increases in public transport for those people that need to get places, like kids, seniors, adults, and for those that need to move with ease and comfort, like city-dwellers, white collar and blue collar workers. This is possible in one city, but when you look at the cost of that in all of our cities, and then you look at the cost of building that infrastructure, you find that it doesnt work. So lets try one city, say, a Metroplex, and when they dont work, we will try one of the next few largest cities. These kind of shifts take generations. First, change where people live, reduce dependence on cars as the primary mode of transport (that means move from suburbs into cities), make public transport the gold standard, then get rid of cars for all the people that need to move quickly and easily, then return to where people already live to make those changes permanent.

This is the biggest load of crap Ive ever heard, you're delusional im sick of people attacking conservatives for a problem that is not their fault. Im tired of getting called a racist for being against open borders. And I am conservative. Im not opposing common sense for everyone not everyone has to live here. Right now I live in the house of my parents. I could work anywhere I want. I know some people that live in their cars. You wanna live in the car why not? I like camaraderie. I like community. I like being with people you can be yourself and be comfortable with. I dont want to live in a big urban center, which is what im being called out for. I want to keep living in a small town thats my home. But i also enjoy traveling so even if I lived in a small town I would travel. I like the freedom of travel. Thats why I traveled to South America when i was younger. And im the last person to try to force people to be like me. I dislike people who try to be like me and who have the same belief system that I do. Im not for communism, thats your belief. I have my own belief system. But I want to live in the house of my parents, go to church, play cards, watch movies, drink beers, ride my bike, and have freedom. Id like to have the same freedom as everyone else but Im not going to force my belief onto anyone else. I cant force you to believe the same way I do, that would be god, and god doesnt exist. I just want people who arent forcing their beliefs on me to allow me my beliefs. The people who believe that I have a problem with their beliefs and who want to force their beliefs on me are the problem and im sick of it. I just want everyone to live their lives the way they see fit. And im sick of people running around like they have the answers and like no one can be wrong but of course, they are wrong. They are wrong if they think that they have the answers and that everyone should live the same way. If you are someone who gets your feathers ruffled and your best friend pissed at you I suggest not talking to me anymore. I dont want to get hurt by your beliefs. If you have strong beliefs then you shouldnt need someone to tell you that your views are not the ones that everyone should have. Its a choice we all have. If we have equal rights we have to get along and if we have equal rights then there isnt a choice. Everybody has a choice. So stop trying to force others to think and believe like you. I have my own beliefs and if I want to share them with someone I dont care if you dont want to hear them. 5ec8ef588b
