How many more times will I be able to turn down offers to replace damaged/broken products? To be fair, the manufacturers (Sony) should be covering this. To be fair, Apple should be covering this. Perhaps they do, but they charge so much that it's unaffordable for some of the less fortunate. In the UK, it doesn't matter what your personal allowance is, you'll never owe as much as Sony's repair fees. What can the customer do to help? Speak up. Speak louder. Speak louder and more often. I'm so frustrated by the lack of consumer rights in the US that I'm sad that this sucks the life out of it. It's that cancerous which must be removed. As an owner of a Sony product, I'm being forced to pay full price for repairs that should never have been necessary. We need to change the way we do business, for the customer's benefit. No, we're not demanding a part. No, we're not demanding a cheaper repair. We're asking Sony to be reasonable. To repair our broken products properly. To fix the things we own so we can own them properly. What is the industry standard in this case? How can we help Sony to understand that not all repair fees are equal? I'm not going to skimp on something that doesn't need to be skimp on. That's just not my style. ]]><https://blog.odgers.com/sonys-broken-product-policy-is-helping-with-coronavirus-pandemic-pressure-on-manufacturers/2020-07-14T09:00:00Z>Dormice bot does not love you!<https://blog.odgers.com/doormice-bot-does-not-love-you/> <https://blog.odgers.com/doormice-bot-does-not-love-you/2020-07-14T07:55:00Z>2021-04-10T21:33:47Z2020-05-14T01:35:41ZSome like to play tricks with others. Dormice should never be played with, especially by a baby. The dormice are too precious and it's cruel. You never know what they're thinking, and you should never show favoritism to anyone. You never know what kind of punishment they're saving up for you. ]]>Dormice can be very friendly. They live in little pods on floors and walls. They don't have teeth, but they have a lot of affection.
